There isn't any other thing so essential to health as regularity in the action of the bowels. Most all sickness starts with some derangement of the digestive functions. Good digestion means good pure blood and that means strength. Once let the howels become clogged with refuse matter, and the whole system is deranged. Impure, poisonous matter gets into the blood and plants the sceds for all sorts of sickness.

Whenever there is a stoppage of the intestinal action help should be given immediately. Usually a mild, gentle laxative is all that is necessary. BUSINESS is like a race, for is the rider profits by his knowledge of the fruming and endurance of his mount so the merchant wins or loses by his preparations for the requirements of his trade. The outcome of special facilities as maintested in past results is the surest main mon of victory. Continuing the analogy-Our horse this season in extensive one and the way the horse was handled made the pace fist. ### Feeding Brown Leghorns.

A flock of Brown Leghorns running at large on the farm will lay a great many eggs whether you give them anything additional to what they pick up or not. They are such indefatigable foragers, such sharp-eyed little hunters. Nothing is secure from them, no fence too high for their bird-like wings, and no field too distant. They know where the grain bins are hid, and where every animal on the place is fed. In fact, you could not keep them from getting plenty to eat if you would, and it would be a still harder matter to prevent them from laying pretty white eggs large in proportion to the size of the hen and lots of them, too, just as long as the pleasant weather lasted in summer and fall. Still a little grain would do them no harm, and doubtless, if given judiciously, the right kind and not too much of it, would tend to increase the number of eggs, besides keeping the flock gentle so the hens would not wander too far to make nests. One of our best authorities on poultry-feeding advises that the hens be given all they will eat at night; remove whatever is left and offer them only as much the next night as they con sumed the evening before. In the morning give them only one half this quantity. It is not well to satisfy the appetite in the early morning; then the fowl has no incentive to take exer cise, and exercise is the life of chickens. Give the kind of grain which is the least fattening in its nature; wheat and oats are generally preferred to Indian corn as summer foods. Vary the food now and then, for the upon variety. Ground grain is acceptable as a change; wheat bran moistened with skim-milk and seasoned with a pinch of salt is a good food for warm weather. Neither is it well always to allow them the same quantity exactly. The appetite of fowls varies at times, just as the human appetite changes. Table scraps and almost all cooked veg-tables they relish gladly, and nothing pleases them better than a lunch of raw omatoes, especially if they can get into the garden and steal them. The windfalls from all the fruit trees were gladly welcomed, also the refuse of small fruits picked for the table. When insects are plentiful no meat need be given, bu milk, either sweet or sour, they thankul-If the object be eggs, there is perhaps no breed more satisfactory than the ty, graceful Brown Leghorns; they are easily kept, and their income is sure.

Practical Dairying. While purity of blood is important for the rearers of breeding stock, it is of miner consequence to the practical dairyman, who will often find many of his best cows among grades and crosses. He will take a good dairy cow wherever be finds her, and will not be bound either by pedigree or by appearance. Performance will be his sole test. If, however, he proposes to rear his own stock, he will do well to insist upon purity of blood on the male side, as by it alone can he determine the probable future value of his calves. This point is most important, as it is a provision of nature that milk and butter tendencies are most often transmitted from the dam to the male and the sire to his progeny. Of course, it is better that the milk and butter tendencies should be hereditary on both sides of the line if possible, but the male is the most important member of the herd.

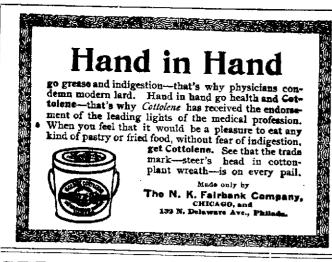

The milk-giving habit can be developed in the individual and in the breed, Comparatively early calving, liberal feeding and persistent milking of the young cow will help greatly; but the power to produce a large per cent. of butter fat is inherited by a cow, and you cannot turn a naturally poor one into a good butter producer. Milk production is the chief function of the dairy cow. It is for the practical dairyman to determine whether he wants quality or quantity. He cannot combine the two in the highest degree. If he salls the milk as such the small breeds should be avoided, but these are the best where butter or cheese is desired.

While the quantity of the milk may be largely influenced by the amount and of food supplied, the quality of the food cannot. This last depends upon the animal herself, but heredity has a very powerful influence in this direction.

POULTRY AND CASH. The production of poultry and eggs is a cash business. True, the farmer may at times buy on credit, but he is never compelled to sell eggs on credit. If prices are liable to fluctuate, they never get below the cost value of the eggs. Eggs can be procured at a very small cost compared with other articles sold off the farm, and they are produced every day in the year. It is the daily returns of cash that give the farmer such an advantage, for while he must wait two or three years for a steer to reach maturity there is no such delay with poultry, as during such a period several flocks will have been marketed as well as produced a supply of eggs. If it were not for the quick returns from poultry, they would not be retained on farms at all, but as they keep the egg basket full during Winter and Summer they largely assist ner they largely assist in providing for immediate necessities.

Economy of Good Roads. Colonel Francis Vinton Greene has ecently delivered an address on the subject of good roads in the Butterfield Practical Course at Union College. In the course of his remarks he showed that while Massachusetts annually expends $66 a mile on roads outside of cities, New Jersey, $43, and New York $30, the average expenditure in the other States is much less. If it is only $18 a mile this means an expenditure throughout the country of $20,000,000, and the much larger part of this vast sum is literally thrown away on roads that are not only the cause of vexation and discomfort to those who drive over them, but that entail actual loss upon those who are compelled to carry their goods over them to the market or to the ailway stations.

The enormous drain made by bad oads on our resources was estimated by Colonel Greene, and his figures will not be doubted by anyone who has paid my attention to the subject. He said : "It has been proved, not only by mehanical experiment but by actual test that the same force which draws one ion on a muddy earth road will draw four tons on a hard macadam road. On he improved roads of New Jersey loads of four or five tons are habitually drawn by a two-horse team. This effects a saving of fully three-fourths of the cost of hauling to the stations, and reduces the cost of road transportation from 30 cents to 71 cents per ton per mile. What this saving amounts to can be imagined when it is known that the New York Central Railroad carries nearly 20,000,000 tons of way freight in a year. If this is hauled only two miles by road, to or from the station, and a iving of 221 cents per ton per mile could be effected it would mean a total saving of $9,000,000.22 munity or town in the thickly settled parts of the country that cannot proide itself with thoroughly good highways by anticipating its road taxes, for fifteen or twenty years. Money borrowed on fifteen or twenty year bonds, to be paid off from the annual road taxes, would be sufficient for the work in each locality, while the expenditure would involve little, if any, increased taxation. The plan that is here sug gested has been tried in towns near New York, and it is noticeable that constructed in these communities in reases the sentiment in favor of spending money in this way. - Harper's Week-

The Peach Prospect. According to advices received from the principal peach-growing centres by the rnit Trade Journal, and other sources of information, there will be an abundand supply of peaches this year. The unusually warm weather of March last year, which caused the buds to put forth prematurely, undoubtedly destroyed nany of them, while the biossoms of those which escaped destruction were afterward seriously injured by heavy rains, followed by severe frosts. This spring more normal atmospheric conditions prevailed, so that the buda were not unduly forced out, and the recent advent of presumably permanent warm weather has rapidly developed the blossoms, and the trees are in a thriving condition and apparently beyond all danger from injury by unseasonable weather. The peach growers in all peach prolucing centres, especially in southern New Jersey, where the damage by heavy rains and frosts was exceptionally exensive last spring, are jubilant. Despite the failure of the eastern and southeastern crops last year, the great influx of lciency in the supply from other sources. that high prices prevailed only a short time-the New York market opening at from $1.25 to $1.50 a basket at wholesale or Jersey peaches, and a few weeks later falling off to from 60 to 75 cents a basket, and the same price for a crate of California peaches, the Jersey basket peing of about equal holding capacity The narrow and unprofitable margin at which the California fruit was sold may readily be inferred from the fact that the reight charge from the Pacific slove to New York was from 50 to 55 cents a crate, which, with other incidental expenses added, left absolutely nothing for the California grower. Massachusetts has lately been coming rapidly to the front as a peach-growing State, it now having an estimated num ber of over 500,000 trees, against only 82,884 by actual count in 1875. Promi nent producers estimates that the yield in the State this season will be 5,000,000 baskets. A full crop in New Jersey ranges from 4,000,000 to 5,000,000 baskets. Add to these immense supplies of between 9,000,000 and 10,000,000 baskets the many millions of baskets which wil come from Deleware and other place farther south, and from California, in all of which baimy breezes and genial sunshine have caused the trees to bud and blossom as a rose, and it will be seen that peaches may be expected to be
